Really Cool Case 4 : Re-segmenting the employment market Heineken

- Heineken wanted to use their impressive sport sponsorships to help build their corporate image and promote the company as a great place to work.

They use the Heineken brand attitude “Open Your World” to show that the company also lived and breathed this attitude.

The recruitment process for an important marketing role was used to demonstrate this attitude by putting candidates through a series of unconventional tests which were all captured by secret cameras.

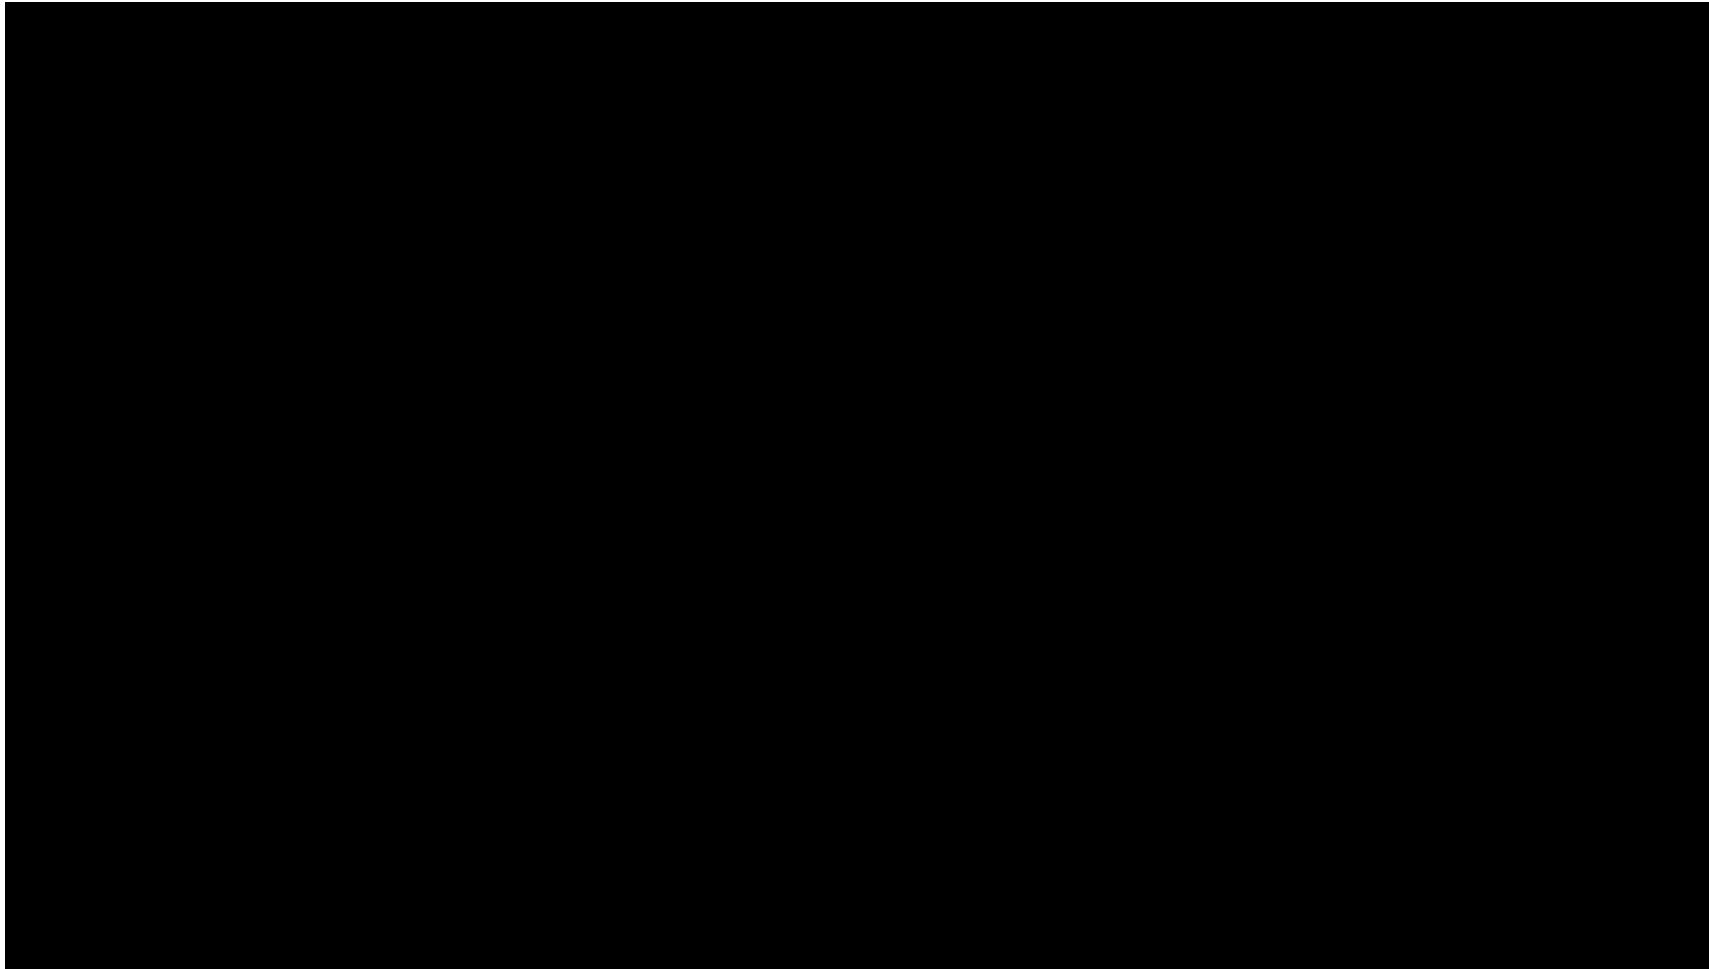

The video has had 422 million media impressions worldwide, CV’s submitted increased by 317% and visits to the HR website increased by 279%.

It also had a very positive impact on Heineken staff.

E3. How does the positioning help reduce consumers' risk & develop faith in it's delivery?

The best framework to understand the same is around brand valuation related ones

Competitive Environment

E3. How does the positioning help reduce consumers' risk & develop faith in it's delivery?

Brand : from the perspective of valuation : BrandFaithSM value

Brand is the faith or trust that people have in it's performance across different attributes

This extent of this faith determines the profits attributable to the brand ...

The intensity of this faith reduces or increases the risk of cash flows ...

The proof of this faith is either

- The pricing premia that individual customers are willing to pay against relevant market choices ... or
- The relative higher return on brand effort deployed to sustain or grow business

From BrandFaithSM

BrandFaithSM XtentSM ...

Brand is the faith or trust that people have in it's performance across different attributes

This extent of this faith determines the profits attributable to the brand ...

Example:

Brand A of steel pipes & tubes that's differentiated on service

Brand B of steel pipes & tubes that's differentiated on quality : adherence to specifications

Brand C of steel pipes & tubes that's differentiated on longevity

Extent of faith in brand performance or delivery needed would be the most in Brand C followed by A followed by B as it's much more difficult to assess longevity rationally and it is easiest to measure against specifications. Hence, the extent of faith required would be highest in C and lowest in B. Thus, the share of profits attributable to brand would be the highest for C followed by A & B respectively.

From BrandFaithSM

BrandFaithSM XtentSM measurement & application ...

BrandFaithSM XtentSM can be measured through research based on the following proprietary model:

1. Determine the importance of drivers of customer choice in the category in the following buckets for different customer segments:
Delivery | Features | Aesthetics | Usage experience | Service | Advocacy | Price
2. Research the response of each segment on the following key metrics:
 - Current associations of different brand with above drivers
 - Default expectations from a new entrant in the category on the above drivers
 - Default expectations on innovations launched by different brands in the market on the above drivers
 - Believability of a proposition launched by brand in question against competitors on the above drivers
 - Extent of scrutiny undertaken on a proposition launched by brand in question against competitors on the above drivers
3. This would give the BrandFaithSM XtentSM for the brand in question for each driver cited
4. BrandFaithSM XtentSM for each driver multiplied by the importance of each driver for the category in general & brand in particular would give composite BrandFaithSM XtentSM for the category as well as for the brand in question.
5. This would in turn not just give the extent of EVA [PAT less cost of capital deployed] attributable to the brand but would also give a sense of Branded Profit Pool for the category as a superset.

BrandFaithSM XtentSM application on positioning

BrandFaithSM XtentSM as measured pre & post positioning stimulus would give the extent of increase in consumers' faith in its delivery

E3. How does the positioning help reduce consumers' risk & develop faith in it's delivery?

BrandFaithSM XtensitySM...

Brand is the faith or trust that people have in it's performance across different attributes

The intensity of this faith reduces or increases the risk of cash flows ...

Example:

Brand A of bath fittings is very well known, respected & considered innovative

Brand B of bath fittings is a new entrant, growing very fast known for good quality at great prices

The intensity of faith in brand's delivery or performance needed would be the most in Brand A followed by B as A has stronger market standing for the right reasons. As a consequence, the risk associated with A would be lower than B & any lender to A would be willing to do so at lower rates.

From BrandFaithSM

BrandFaithSM XtensitySM measurement & application ...

BrandFaithSM XtensitySM can be measured through research based on the following proprietary model:

1. Determine the internal & external intensity of brand on the following attributes:
 - Relevance | Differentiation | Coherence | Dynamism → Internally & Externally
 - Benchmark a carefully chosen category, adjacent brands and one outstanding brand independent of category
2. This would give the BrandFaithSM XtensitySM for every brand in question benchmarked to other players
3. Establish the rate of capital & people availability for different brands in question through research
4. Plot the BrandFaithSM XtensitySM against the rate of capital & people availability for the different brands. This is generally a S curve as shown
5. Plot own BrandFaithSM XtensitySM & arrive at Brand Capital IndexSM. Similarly, arrive at Brand HR IndexSM. Take an average of the two in ratio of capital deployment for human versus other resources to get Brand Composite Capital IndexSM.

How does the brand reflect Consumer Diversity?

How does the Brand Reflect Consumer Diversity?

Brand is generally about 'groups' of consumers ...

Hence, Brands are about aggregation ...

However

Each consumer is different ...

And

Ideally, each consumer would like to be targeted individually with a customised proposition ...

But

That'd be too complex for a brand or business to deliver in most cases ...

How does the Brand Reflect Consumer Diversity?

So ...

What happens when sub groups of occasions or manners of usage start emerging

Which are more similar within themselves on drivers & expectations

Which are more different from each other

Whose propositions are all still resonant with the brand ...?

When one needs to reflect the diversity of usage?

Here we have used No.1 as an example of a 50:50 existing child brand.

Child brand logo

The child brand logo should be locked up to Godrej logo, roughly 1.5 x bigger and designed to reflect the category.

Colour palette

One colour from the secondary colour palette (55%) that links to the existing colour, an ingredient of the primary colours (10%) and white for all backgrounds (35%). Black for text.

Illustration

Make it unique to the child brand and introduce category cues.

Other distinctive category graphics

Introduce additional graphics relevant to the category and harmonious with the masterbrand.

Image style and tone of voice

Make the image style and tone of voice appropriate to the category, but where possible link it to the masterbrand.

Beautiful soft skin

Typeface

Any typeface that reflects category cues and builds child brand personality.

5:95

Overview (for example purposes only)

5:95 child brands have almost no relationship to the masterbrand.

These are brands that should not be closely associated with the masterbrand as they do not support the Brighter Living positioning.

These principles also apply to joint ventures with their own visual identity.

Here we have used Hit as an example of a 5:95 child brand.

Child brand logo

Designed to reflect the category with the Godrej logo in a quality seal not locked up, endorsing the product on back of pack.

Colour palette

No link to masterbrand.

Illustration

Does not have to be used.

Other distinctive category graphics

Introduce additional graphics relevant to the category.

Image style and tone of voice

Make the image style and tone of voice appropriate to the category, with no link to the masterbrand.

Typeface

Use any typeface that reflects category cues and builds child brand personality.
