The highest race speed recorded over two furlongs is 70.76 km/h (43.97 mph) and was achieved by Winning Brew trained by Francis Vitale (United States), at the Penn National Race Course, Grantville, Pennsylvania, United States, on 14 May 2008. Winning Brew covered the quarter-mile (402 m, 2 furlongs) in 20.57 sec. She was a 2 year old filly thoroughbred.

Which is however the oldest 'brand' in the world?

Which is the oldest 'brand' in the world?

The oldest generic brand, in continuous use in India since the Vedic period (ca. 1100 B.C.E to 500 B.C.E), is the herbal paste known as Chyawanprash, consumed for its purported health benefits.

Various Indian holy books like Mahabharat, Puranas etc., relate that Ashwini Kumar brothers, the twins, who were Rajvaidya (Royal Physicians) to Devas during Vedic times, first prepared this formulation for Chyawan Rishi at his Ashram on Dhosi Hill near Narnaul, Haryana, India, hence the name Chyawanprash.[1][2] The first historically documented formula for chyawanprash appears in the Charaka Samhita, the ancient Ayurvedic treatise[3] from the early first millennium BCE.

Strategy is about ...

Strategy is about ...

Making a choice

Seven Steps to Strategy Making

Applying creativity to a scientifically rigorous process enables teams to generate novel strategies and to pinpoint the one most likely to succeed.

1. Frame a Choice

Convert your issue into at least two mutually exclusive options that might resolve it.

2. Generate Possibilities

Broaden your list of options to ensure an inclusive range of possibilities.

3. Specify Conditions

For each possibility, describe what must be true for it to be strategically sound.

4. Identify Barriers

Determine which conditions are least likely to hold true.

5. Design Tests

For each key barrier condition, devise a test you deem valid and sufficient to generate commitment.

6. Conduct the Tests

Start with the tests for the barrier conditions in which you have the least confidence.

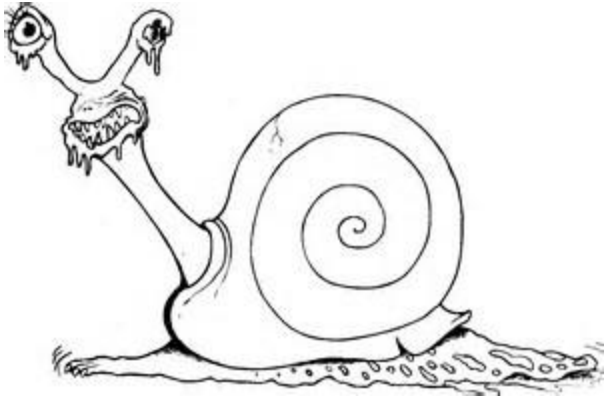

7. Make Your Choice

Review your key conditions in light of your test results in order to reach a decision.

Call Out Case - Blazar

Blazar : New entrant in Indian hair color & care market. A Brazilian company with global revenues of USD 500 mn, growing at 25% 5yr CAGR, same markets' share of growth 55%, same market share of base 65%, GM 70%, Ebitda 30%. Operates in 6 countries around the globe [Brazil, USA, UK, Italy, Nigeria, Japan] while exporting to 40 more countries.

Blazar, founded by a second generation entrepreneur from a family of small retailers, started operating in Brazil out of a garage 20 years back focussing on niche & premium natural hair care using authentic ingredients. Over time, the business started finding far more success in hair colors, which were ubiquitous in Latin America [65% of revenue]. It's a USD 2.7 bn industry there. Blazar has a 5% overall share but a 20% share in the premium end of the market. The model used by Blazar was largely in-salon sales through a professional & a retail line. Blazar hair colors have sold through a range of fashion colors proposition supported by natural additives as a secondary lever. Of late, the business has also started experimenting with a few proofs of concept in opening hair salons – however, that has not done well. Blazar continues to experiment with the same. Blazar is backed by a very strong R&D.

Blazar now wants to enter Indian market. The Indian hair care market is roughly $3.3 bn growing at 10%. The hair color market is around 20% of that growing at 20% yoy. Almost 15% of hair care and 30% of hair colors are used professionally. Further, around 15% of hair care and 5% of hair color is sold for home use through salons. Average EBITDA in the category ranges from 12% to 23% with cheaper formats having a higher margin.

Hair care in the market includes shampoos, rinse off conditioners, pre conditioners, leave in conditioners, styling gels, mousse and waxes with product segmentation operating on scalp type and cleansing / moisturizing / volumizing benefits. Hair colors include 3 major formats – powder [popularly called dyes] selling at Rs. 10 per use, hair cremes operating at Rs. 50 – 500 per use, henna operating at Rs. 100 for 5 uses. They constitute 30%, 50% and 20% of the market growing respectively at 5%, 20%, 30%. In terms of shades, India is a black & dark brown dominated market [60% growing at 4%] with burgundy next at 30% growing at 25% and rest of the vibrant shades at 10% growing at 20%.

Blazar wants to enter the hair color & / or care market. Backed by a private equity fund now, it has resources to consider a stronger entry. What's the brand $\leftrightarrow$ business strategy over 10 years that you'd recommend?

Call Out cases ...

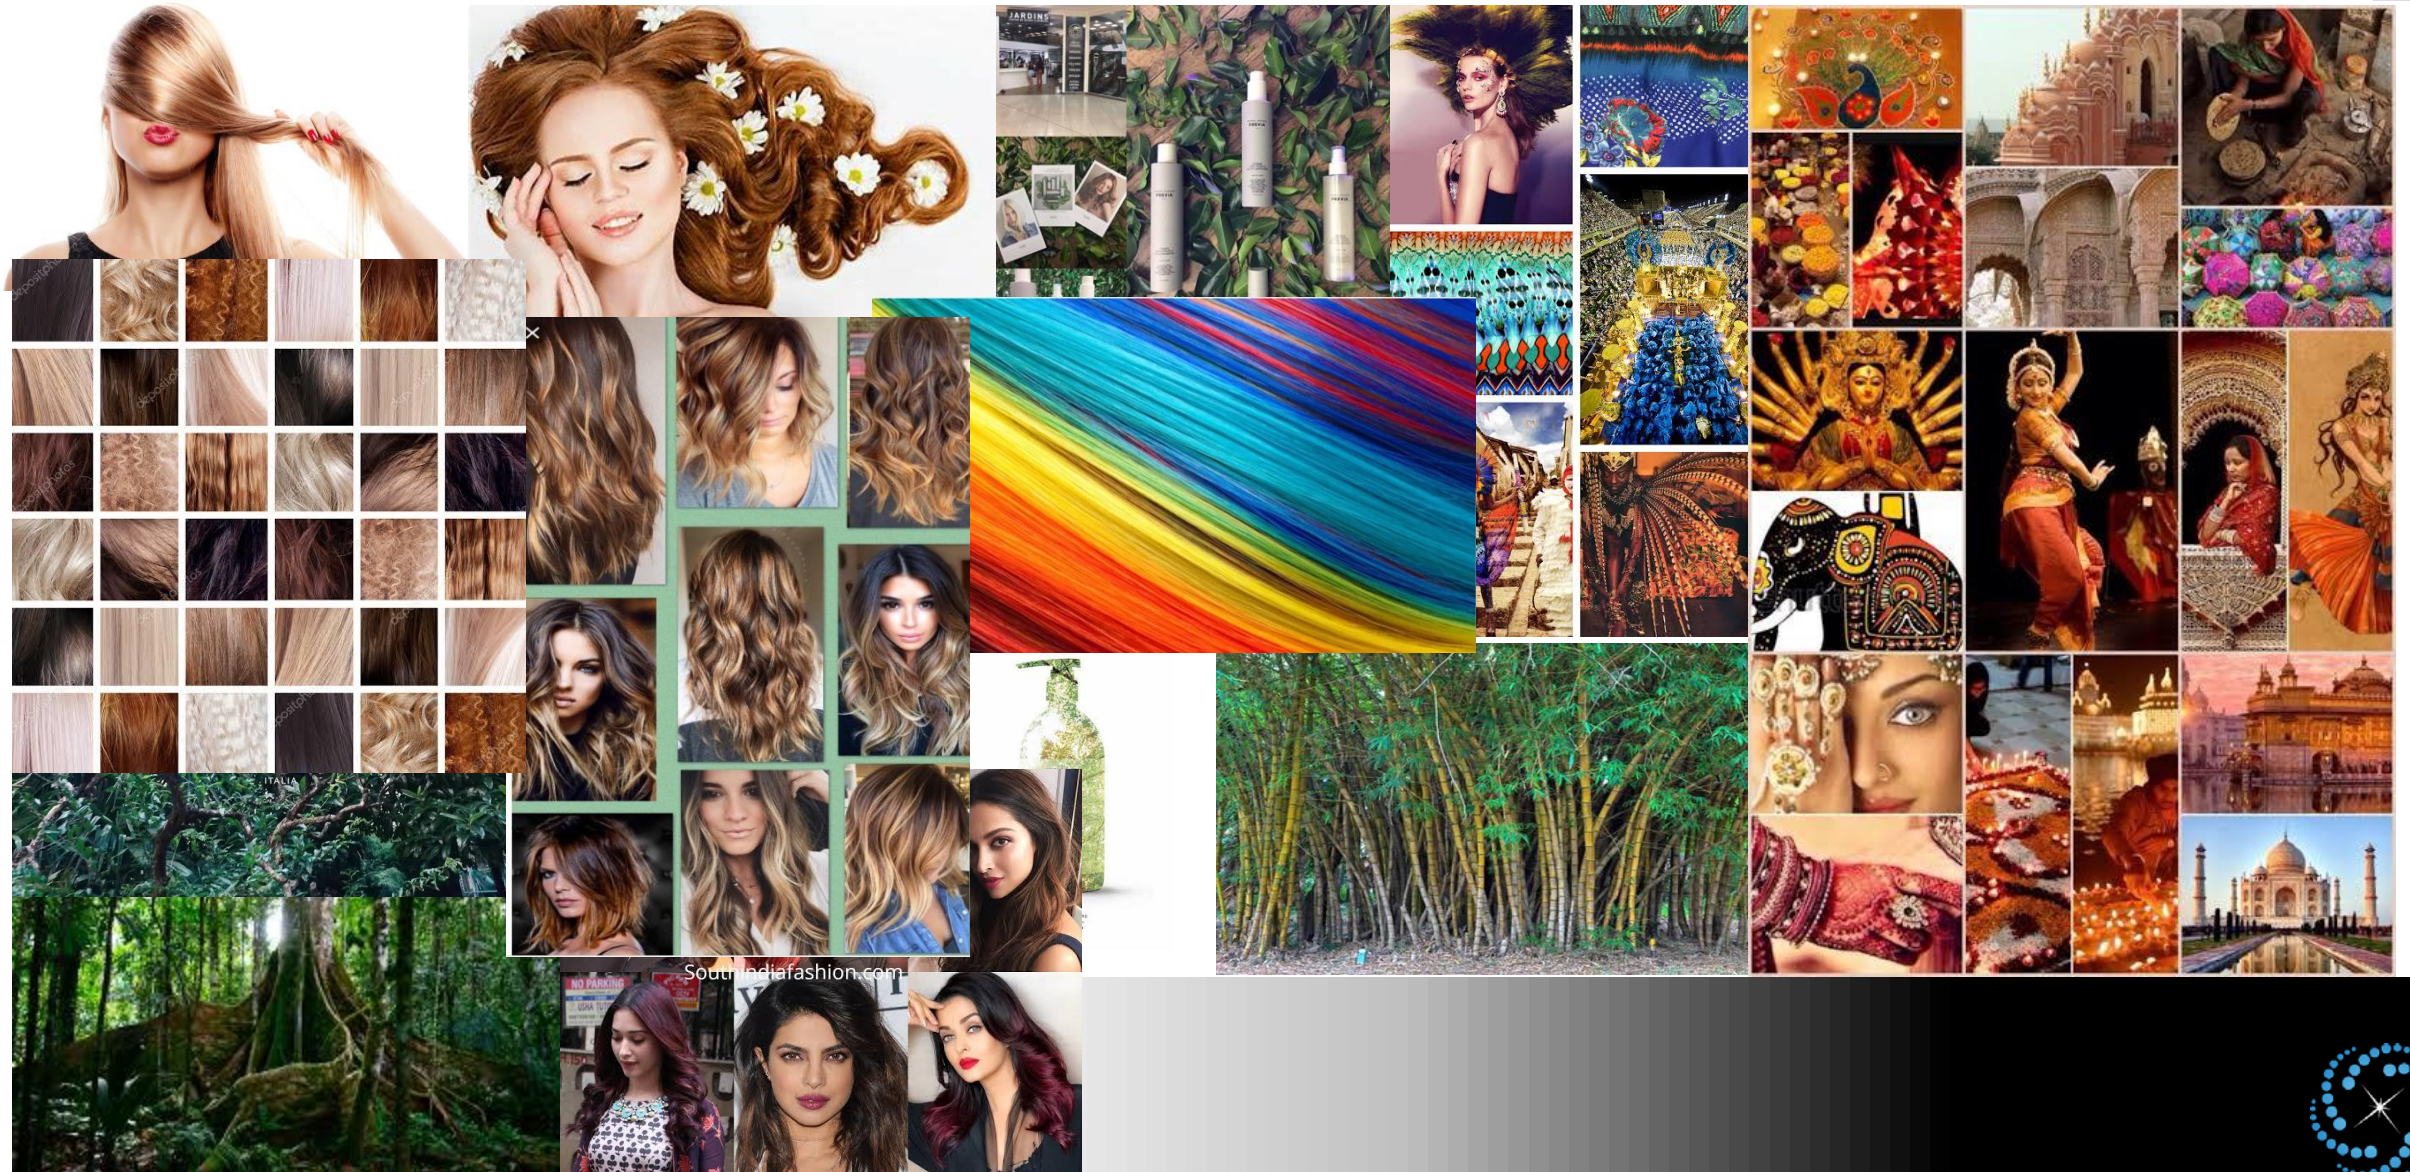

Call Out Example - Basil

Basil belongs to Pt. Masa Depan Busana Apparels : one of the leading feminine apparel companies in Indonesia

- Basil does a business of roughly USD 20 mn with EBITDA of 8%. It sells 30% through own stores and 70% through shop in shops in other stores. 50% of it's business comes from festive wear for more conservative, older consumers. 50% of it's business comes from daily, casual fashion for urban & affluent Chinese working women. Bulk of the more modern merchandise sells from own stores. Basil sells largely because it understands fits & local trends better. It imports & customises from India, Taiwan & China.
- However, the business hasn't been doing well with both the segments struggling. It faces the following challenge : which of the two segments to prioritise? How does it build a sustainable, profitable branded business for the future?
- Past attempts haven't really been successful as there has always been lack of clarity

Call Out Case - Blazar

Blazar : New entrant in Indian hair color & care market. A Brazilian company with global revenues of USD 500 mn, growing at 25% 5yr CAGR, same markets' share of growth 55%, same market share of base 65%, GM 70%, Ebitda 30%. Operates in 6 countries around the globe [Brazil, USA, UK, Italy, Nigeria, Japan] while exporting to 40 more countries.

Blazar, founded by a second generation entrepreneur from a family of small retailers, started operating in Brazil out of a garage 20 years back focussing on niche & premium natural hair care using authentic ingredients. Over time, the business started finding far more success in hair colors, which were ubiquitous in Latin America [65% of revenue]. It's a USD 2.7 bn industry there. Blazar has a 5% overall share but a 20% share in the premium end of the market. The model used by Blazar was largely in-salon sales through a professional & a retail line. Blazar hair colors have sold through a range of fashion colors proposition supported by natural additives as a secondary lever. Of late, the business has also started experimenting with a few proofs of concept in opening hair salons – however, that has not done well. Blazar continues to experiment with the same. Blazar is backed by a very strong R&D.

Blazar now wants to enter Indian market. The Indian hair care market is roughly $3.3 bn growing at 10%. The hair color market is around 20% of that growing at 20% yoy. Almost 15% of hair care and 30% of hair colors are used professionally. Further, around 15% of hair care and 5% of hair color is sold for home use through salons. Average EBITDA in the category ranges from 12% to 23% with cheaper formats having a higher margin.

Hair care in the market includes shampoos, rinse off conditioners, pre conditioners, leave in conditioners, styling gels, mousse and waxes with product segmentation operating on scalp type and cleansing / moisturizing / volumizing benefits. Hair colors include 3 major formats – powder [popularly called dyes] selling at Rs. 10 per use, hair cremes operating at Rs. 50 – 500 per use, henna operating at Rs. 100 for 5 uses. They constitute 30%, 50% and 20% of the market growing respectively at 5%, 20%, 30%. In terms of shades, India is a black & dark brown dominated market [60% growing at 4%] with burgundy next at 30% growing at 25% and rest of the vibrant shades at 10% growing at 20%.

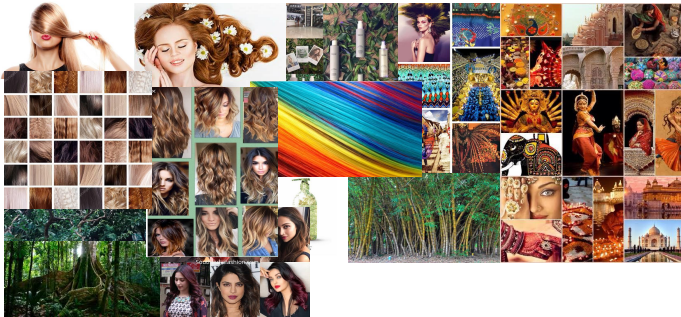

Blazar wants to enter the hair color & / or care market. Backed by a private equity fund now, it has resources to consider a stronger entry. What's the brand ↔ business strategy over 10 years that you'd recommend?

- Stayfree from J&J launched SF Secure in response – market expansion focussed, low end napkin clawing it's way back to 57% volume share
- Whisper launched Whisper Ultra – a polymer based premium napkin which became ~ 15% of it's value
- Within an year : Whisper diverted 88% of investment to Whisper Ultra.
- The format grew by leaps & bounds over the next decade forcing Stayfree Secure to switch too despite higher costs

Why is customer grouping important?

At first, the question was: “What color do you want? Black? Or Black?” Standardization was the foundation of mass production.

Groups exist, we don't create them. Over time, they become noticeable. After the initial technology breakthrough to create a new category it is CUSTOMER needs that drive continuing innovation

Key output: Initial customer grouping example

#	Initial Groups	Description
1	Functionality Focused	These vertically integrated customers seek the fundamental functionality of the packaging and want the minimal product that is functionally compliant and will provide the required leakage prevention.
2	Flexibility Seekers	Flexibility seeking companies sell in the open market and are in market conditions that are quite volatile. Their volume requirements for packaging can vary dramatically and suddenly
3	Aesthetics Concerned	These companies sell in the open market. While they have a stable business with an established customer-base, they are in competitive markets and the packaging aesthetics are important as a visual carrier of their brand.
4	Value Seekers	Value seeking companies have in-house packaging expertise and want suppliers to offer packaging products based on their specs at good value.
5	Expertise Seekers	These companies do not have in-house packaging expertise and seek assistance from suppliers in deciding upon the right packaging solution for their products.

Benefits of needs-based customer grouping

Needs-based customer grouping increases relevance and impact at every stage along the customer experience journey map

1. Efficacy--helps you better meet the true needs of different customers and the different contexts in which they buy
 - Better understanding of needs = more relevant solutions
 - Find and address hidden needs
 - Delight customers and improve satisfaction--increased loyalty and decreased switching
2. Efficiency--focuses limited resources (money, people, etc. across the organization) on the best opportunity for growth and the different contexts in which they buy
 - Focus on most responsive customers drives efficiency
 - Needs-driven development at Moments-of-Truth drives differentiation
 - Better manage market complexity

Customer grouping is a business initiative, not just a marketing activity

B1. Who, amongst consumers, is driving the market or brand growth harder? How?

What is used in an initial customer grouping?

There are three types of variables required to identify customer groups :

- Customer experiential benefits (e.g. flexibility, expertise, responsiveness, reliability)
 - These benefits are what the customer gets/seeks as they go through the various stages of the experience journey.
- Customer type (e.g. ownership, business model, life-stage, Socio-economic class, education levels)
- Context for the experience (e.g. For fashion retailing – planned single purchase, planned for others, unplanned impulse, etc.)

1. Identify potential customer group variables

Experiential Benefits

What does your customer get/seek as they use the products and services through the experience journey?
Benefit 1
Benefit 2
Benefit 3
Benefit 4
Benefit 5
Benefit 6
...Benefit N.

Customer Types

What are the differences in firm-o-graphic or demographics that differentiates the way customers get/seek differential value from the same offering?

Customer Type Variable 2
Customer Type Variable 3
...Customer Type Variable N.

Context

What are the different context for purchase of the same offering?
Context 1
Context 2
Context 3
...Context N.

B1. Who, amongst consumers, is driving the market or brand growth harder? How?

2. Shortlist customer grouping variables

Potential customer grouping variables need to be assessed for their meaningfulness and actionability

Meaningful

Meaningful variables divide a market into groups that are homogenous within but heterogeneous across

Key considerations

1. Consider the extremes for the variable.
 - Can you identify a few customers that sit at each of the extremes? If no, then it does not provide meaningful differentiation
2. Do most customers prioritize this variable at the same level i.e. do all customers have the same level of importance for the variable. If yes, then it does not provide meaningful differentiation

Actionable

Actionable variables are observable and measurable characteristics that make identifying and targeting groups possible.

Key considerations

1. Can you envision different offerings for the extremes of this variable- if no, then it's not actionable
2. Can you envision different pricing or revenue models for this variable- if no, then it's not actionable
3. Would you sell differently to the extremes? If no, then it's not actionable

2. Shortlist customer grouping variables

- Assess your list of Customer Grouping Variables on Meaningfulness and Actionability
- Select the 3 – 4 key variables that are High in both Meaningfulness and Actionability; you must select at least one Benefit and one Customer Type
- Determine the options for each variable

Customer Grouping Variable	Meaningfulness	Actionability
Benefit 1	H M L	H M L
Benefit 2	H M L	H M L
Benefit 3	H M L	H M L
Benefit 4	H M L	H M L

3. Create market frame

- Determine the options for the prioritized variables
- Benefit Options
- Benefit or Customer Type Options
- Customer Type Options

- A market frame is simply a matrix that is built using the shortlisted customer grouping variables
- It allows us to look at the most important (meaningful and actionable) variables against each other to identify customer groups

“Customer Type” variables and options identify key differences between seemingly similar customers.

Offline – Reads.....

4. Identify initial customer grouping

- 1. Each of the cells in the market frame is a potential customer grouping. However we can combine some of the cells because of their similarities. Use your judgment and knowledge of the market to ask:
 - a) Can we eliminate any of these groups because they don't exist or because they represent a very small part of the market?
 - b) Which ones are similar enough that you we can group them together?
- 2. Provide descriptive names to each of the initial groups
- 3. Write a 1-2 sentence description for each of the groups

Experiential Benefits /Context		Experiential Benefit Variable 1		Context Variable 1
		Option 1	Option 2	Option 1	Option 2

4. Identify initial customer grouping - example

Experiential Benefits/Context Business Type		Demand Predictability		New Drums Contract
		Low	High	Low End Metal Drums	Specialty Chemical Pails
Vertical Integration	Supply to internal customer	Functionality Focused			Expertise Seekers
	Sell in open market	Flexibility Seekers	Aesthetics Concerned

#	Initial Grouping	Description
1	Functionality Focused	These vertically integrated customers seek the fundamental functionality of the packaging and want the minimal product that is functionally compliant and will provide the required leakage prevention. Most of them have adequate in-house packaging expertise for metal drums and want suppliers to offer packaging based on their specs at low prices.
2	Flexibility Seekers	Flexibility seeking companies sell in the open market and are in market conditions that are quite volatile. Their volume requirements for packaging can vary dramatically and suddenly
3	Aesthetics Concerned	These companies sell in the open market. While they have a stable business with an established customer-base, they are in competitive markets and the packaging aesthetics are important as a visual carrier of their brand.
4	Expertise Seekers	These companies need packaging expertise for specialty chemical pails and seek assistance from suppliers, even if they have some in-house expertise, in deciding upon the right packaging solution for their products.

B1. Who, amongst consumers, is driving the market or brand growth harder? How?

Customer Experience Journey Mapping

A customer experience journey map is a visual representation of the customer's journey (from their perspective) before, during and after the purchase of the solution/experience. It identifies the customer's needs and expectations from providers and also highlights where there are significant gaps in their current experience.

It identifies touch points and, from there, the "Moments-of-Truth" – which are the key points in the customer's experience where a customer moves towards or away from your brand.

Customer Experience Journey Mapping

Note - You can create an initial customer journey map baseline by filling in the above experience journey map for a typical customer, using existing data and the knowledge of the cross-functional team.

Tips for Journey Map Analysis

- Customer group-focus
- Customer context
- Use data, not just opinions
- Synthesize and consolidate
- Prioritization is critical

Example: Retail Credit Cards

Background: A consumer credit card company uncovered two target customer groups with different profiles:
High Spending Reward Seekers and Revolvers

- High Spending Reward Seekers

- Credit card as a cash substitute
- Pay their bill in its entirety every month
- High loyalty to 1-2 cards
- Choose credit card based on rewards program

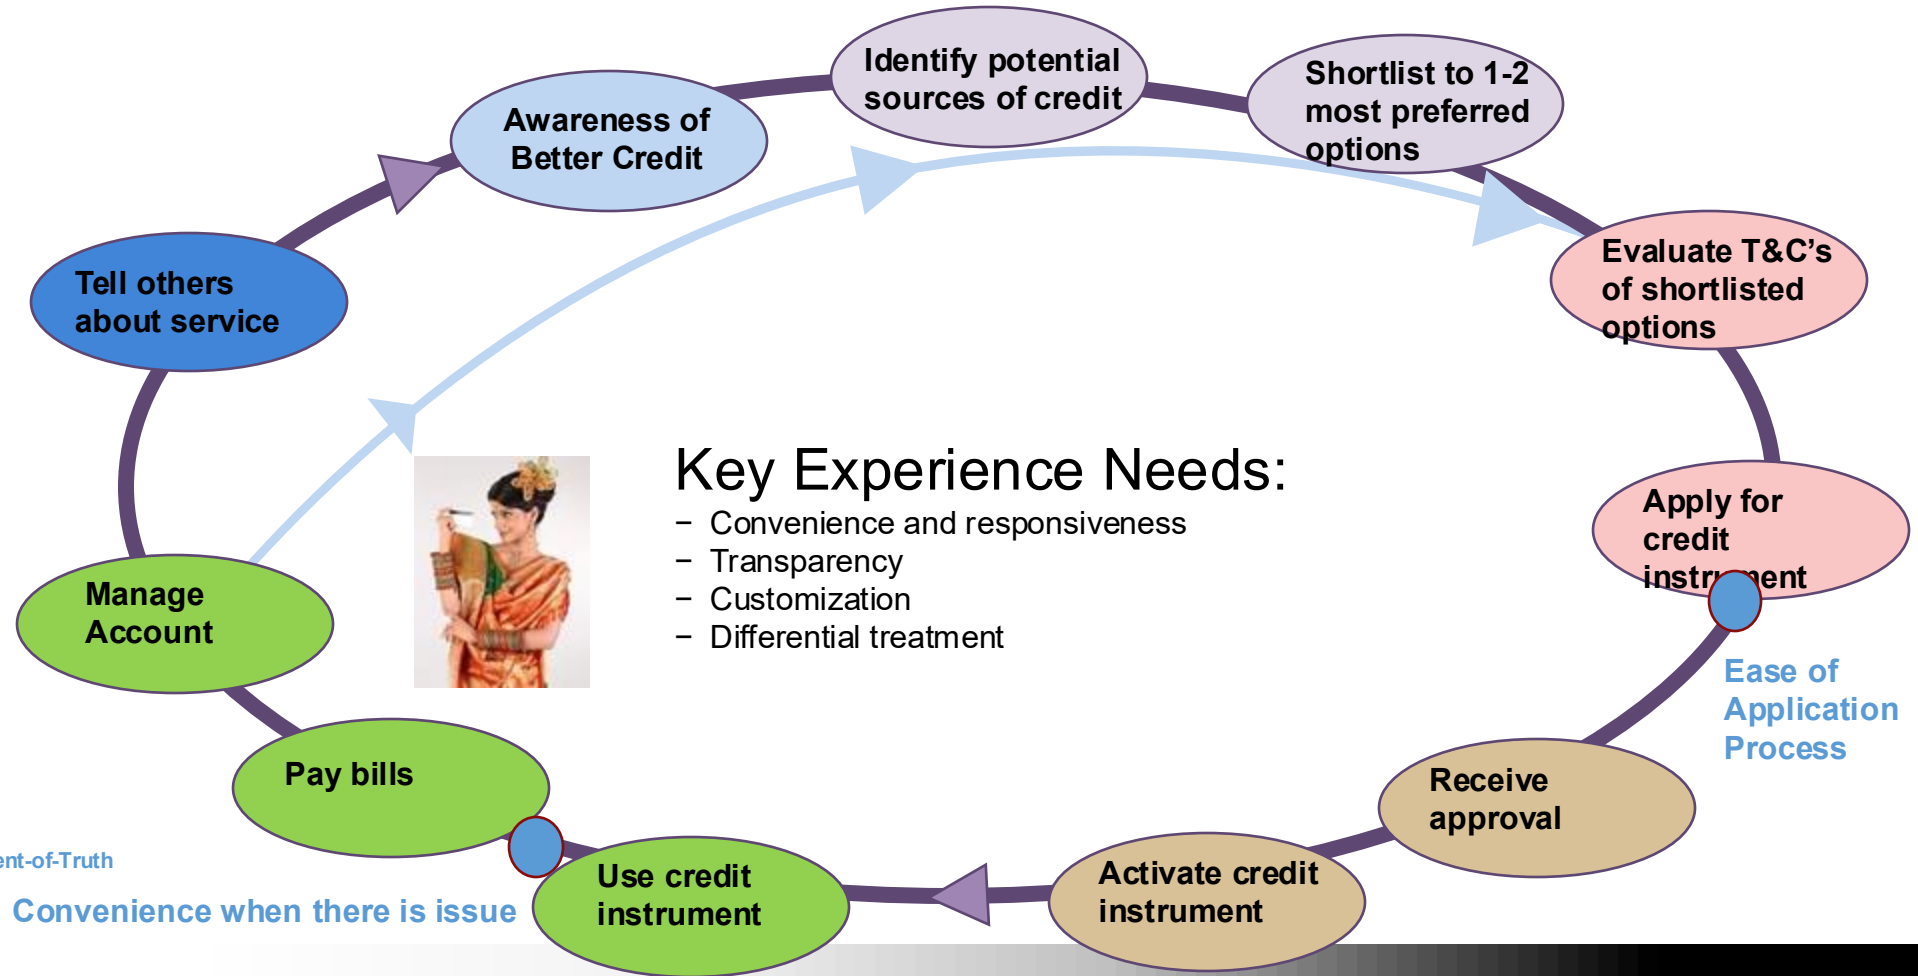

- Revolvers

- Don't pay their bill in its entirety every month
- Very willing to 'shop' credit cards for the best promotional rate or offer
- May carry 5-6 cards

POTENTIAL ENTRANTS

1. Due to a lot of government plans like Operation Flood, and other initiatives, possibility of new entrants is quite high.
2. But still there exists the biggest challenge of a strong supply chain from cattle owners to consumers and given the nature of the product, it is very essential to build this robust channel and hence seasoned players have a better say here.

SUPPLIERS

1. Suppliers have a bargaining power
2. Mother dairy's key supplier is Pradeshik Co-operative Dairy federation
3. Mother Dairy enjoys up to 3/4th of the price of sale price where as other private players don't.

INDUSTRY RIVALRY

1. Regional co-operative
2. Age old brands like AMUL, Nestle, Danone etc.
3. Small vendors who directly supply milk to households.

SUBSTITUTES

1. Milk in India is a non-substitutable commodity not only for it's nutrient content but also the religious and cultural aspects associated with it.

BUYERS

1. Milk is essentially interwoven into the culture of India population and hence the market to which this can be sold is huge.
2. Given the fact that there are also international brands in milk and milk products, it becomes seemingly tough to sell to a customer, specifically urban population, who wants to taste the international brands.
3. But Mother dairy has the advantage of LIC as Indian consumers have a strong belief that government supported brand is better than private.

- b. Relentless What ifs -- Inductive reasoning

Relentless Whys – Almost like a child

Japanese Men

- A growing section of men in Japan are increasingly happy to play second fiddle to women
- Clothing is becoming more unisex with a skew towards feminine
- Men's grooming & cosmetics is a booming business
- A lot of these men are not interested in sex : they desire platonic relationships & are hence called herbivores
- The culture has now permeated South Korea
- Interestingly, shades of the same are seen in UK too...

: What's up? Why is this happening?

Relentless Whys – Almost like a child

What's up? Why is this happening?

1. A section of Japanese women are driving the trend
2. Abhorrence towards war & US curbs on military have led to pacifist culture
3. Post WWII generation has grown up in single mother / widow HHs
4. Women who were much more marginalised in Japanese society are asserting themselves

What insights are driving the market growth?

B6. Which cluster of insights are fundamentally fuelling the growth for consumers?

c. From Insights to Foresights

Since the context is almost always future brand performance,

It's important to root insights into the future : insights which are going to shape the future disproportionately

Such insights are foresights

Yet – all insights should be foresights as

Foresights without a component of present could be rudderless

Insights without a component of future would not be sustainable

B6. Which cluster of insights are fundamentally fuelling the growth for consumers?

d. From Insights to Empathy : The Insight Spiral

Singular Insights seldom suffice

It's important to run in the shoes of the consumer ...

See the world the way xe sees it ...

Empathy → 360 degree view of all Whats, Whys & Hows with sharp yet rich understanding of linkages between them.

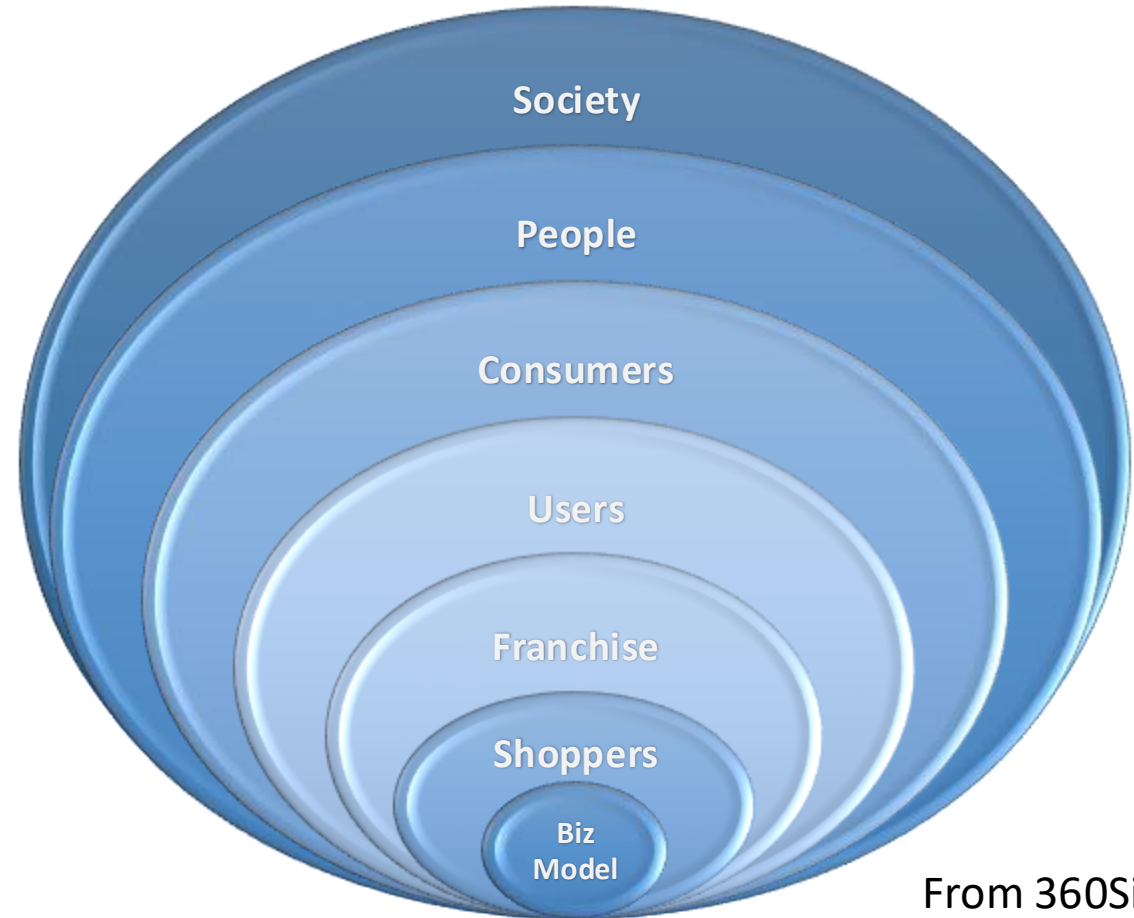

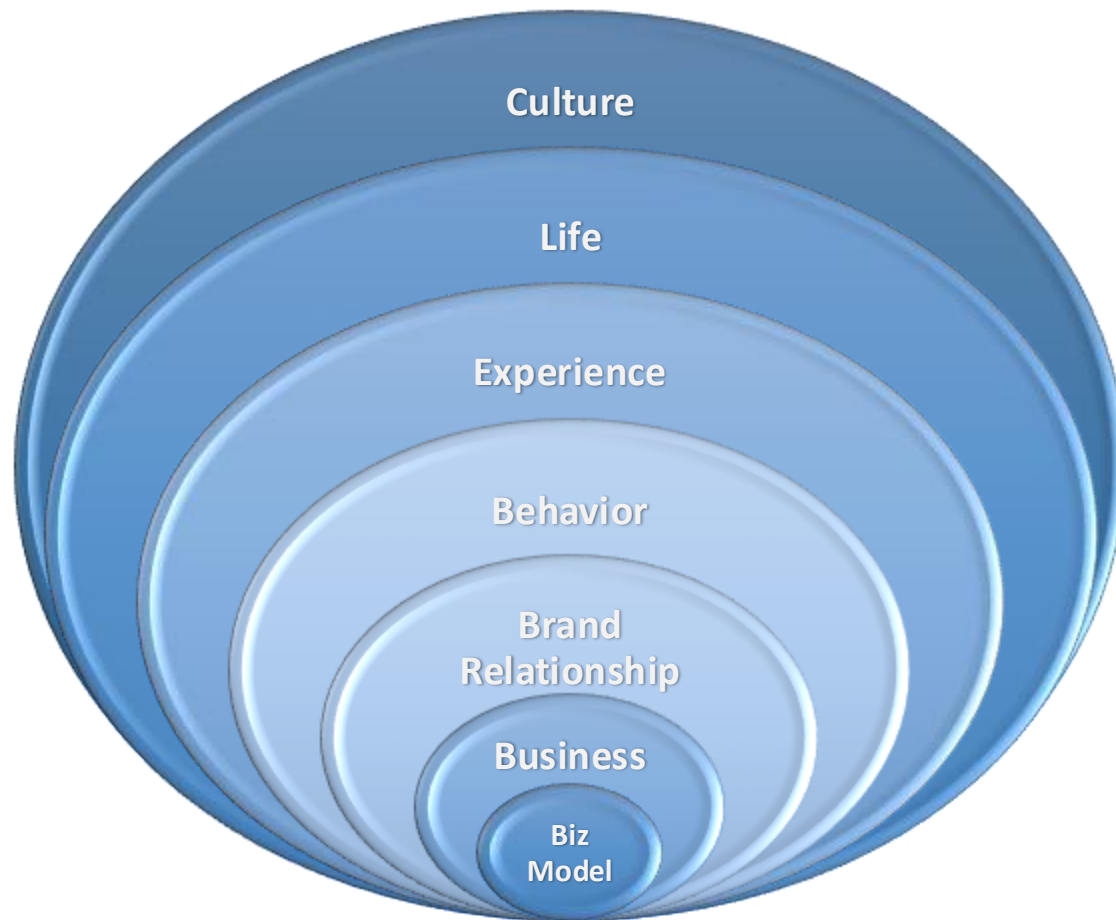

Of these, the interlinked but ever-deepening Whys are the foundation

Indian society developing a culture of multi-faceted fitness evidenced through marathons, gyms, nutritionists etc.
Indians want to feel good and appear good through better fitness evidenced through collective fitness endeavours, social sharing and ever expanding universe of hedonism influencers.
Indians increasingly see diet as a route to fitness but most remain oblivious of protein deficiency & suspicious of supplements seeing them as somewhat therapeutic or even steroidal
Consumption of supplements remains a small niche amongst 'gyimmers' with large parts of populations remaining on the fringes – specifically kids, general fitness enthusiasts, females. Supplements as food additives remains an explored area

Basil belongs to Pt. Masa Depan Busana Apparels : one of the leading feminine apparel companies in Indonesia

- Basil does a business of roughly USD 20 mn with EBITDA of 8%. It sells 30% through own stores and 70% through shop in shops in other stores. 50% of it's business comes from festive wear for more conservative, older consumers. 50% of it's business comes from daily, casual fashion for urban & affluent Chinese working women. Bulk of the more modern merchandise sells from own stores. Basil sells largely because it understands fits & local trends better. It imports & customises from India, Taiwan & China.
- However, the business hasn't been doing well with both the segments struggling. It faces the following challenge : which of the two segments to prioritise? How does it build a sustainable, profitable branded business for the future?
- Past attempts haven't really been successful as there has always been lack of clarity

Call Out Case - blaZar

Call Out Case - Blazar

Blazar : New entrant in Indian hair color & care market. A Brazilian company with global revenues of USD 500 mn, growing at 25% 5yr CAGR, same markets' share of growth 55%, same market share of base 65%, GM 70%, Ebitda 30%. Operates in 6 countries around the globe [Brazil, USA, UK, Italy, Nigeria, Japan] while exporting to 40 more countries.

Blazar, founded by a second generation entrepreneur from a family of small retailers, started operating in Brazil out of a garage 20 years back focussing on niche & premium natural hair care using authentic ingredients. Over time, the business started finding far more success in hair colors, which were ubiquitous in Latin America [65% of revenue]. It's a USD 2.7 bn industry there. Blazar has a 5% overall share but a 20% share in the premium end of the market. The model used by Blazar was largely in-salon sales through a professional & a retail line. Blazar hair colors have sold through a range of fashion colors proposition supported by natural additives as a secondary lever. Of late, the business has also started experimenting with a few proofs of concept in opening hair salons – however, that has not done well. Blazar continues to experiment with the same. Blazar is backed by a very strong R&D.

Blazar now wants to enter Indian market. The Indian hair care market is roughly $3.3 bn growing at 10%. The hair color market is around 20% of that growing at 20% yoy. Almost 15% of hair care and 30% of hair colors are used professionally. Further, around 15% of hair care and 5% of hair color is sold for home use through salons. Average EBITDA in the category ranges from 12% to 23% with cheaper formats having a higher margin.

Hair care in the market includes shampoos, rinse off conditioners, pre conditioners, leave in conditioners, styling gels, mousse and waxes with product segmentation operating on scalp type and cleansing / moisturizing / volumizing benefits. Hair colors include 3 major formats – powder [popularly called dyes] selling at Rs. 10 per use, hair cremes operating at Rs. 50 – 500 per use, henna operating at Rs. 100 for 5 uses. They constitute 30%, 50% and 20% of the market growing respectively at 5%, 20%, 30%. In terms of shades, India is a black & dark brown dominated market [60% growing at 4%] with burgundy next at 30% growing at 25% and rest of the vibrant shades at 10% growing at 20%.

Blazar wants to enter the hair color & / or care market. Backed by a private equity fund now, it has resources to consider a stronger entry. What's the brand ↔ business strategy over 10 years that you'd recommend?

- Shelly is housewife with two children John - 7yrs old and Brittany - 5 yrs old. She completely dotes on her kids and is a hands-on mother. She actively takes part in all their educational and extra-curricular activities.
- Both of Shelly's kids are extremely naughty and they make her task as a mother really difficult. One of the toughest parts of her job is keeping their clothes clean. Since both the kids like to play and try new things - they get their clothes stained and dirty on a daily basis.
- Shelly often has to control them from getting their clothes too dirty as she knows that stain-removal is a daunting task. Recently, she got upset and angry with John when he completely ruined his clothes with mud, grease and oil stains. However, she realized he was trying to help his dad with repairing the car and was actually very interested in knowing more about cars. She felt let down with her behaviour as she felt she had curtailed John's spirit of learning and exploring new things.

Core Target Customer & Insight

C2. Which person should the brand consequently target as it's core consumer or prime advocate?

Vivid Consumer Profile

A brand for a fabric entrepreneur seeking to differentiate against fierce competition endowed with either bigger scale or much lower margins

Who am I

I have worked hard to achieve what I have done in my fabric business & I take pride in that. Yet, there are significant constraints in growing further profitably. The market is full of players playing largely on either volumes or price discounting. These challenges have also prevented us from upgrading our technology & machines. In such times, we really need to differentiate ourselves.

However, there's not much innovation possible at my end : eventually, any better performance is highly dependent on the yarn being used. Yet, most yarn suppliers are not that great in their product differentiation. On top of that, at our volumes, there are not many suppliers who are willing to experiment along with us for new, differentiated products. Yet, the most important people in my life are my customers. Anything that secures them, their relationship, their loyalty towards me is what matters. But, in this volatile market, making that happen is quite difficult. As a result, the business keeps becoming commercially challenging : high inventories, big swings in offtake & trends, margin pressures.

Yet, I remain cautiously optimistic about the business. Polyester is an ever-growing market. We just need to crack differentiation & strong customer relationships. Wish there were more people helping each other out!

Benefits & Reasons to Believe

D2. How does the brand answer the biggest usage objections that core consumer might have?

Sometimes, consumers have certain pre-conceived notions about the brand offer

→ Leading to immediate & impulsive objections towards trials or usage

Examples include :

- Something cheap might be ineffective
- Something highly effective might be expensive
- Something natural might not be effective
- Something highly effective might have side effects
- ...

It's important to revise the brand offer to reflect the objections

Despite being a naturals based brand, Garnier Fructis brand offer is often about efficacy choosing to signal naturals through design or brand names.

D3. What makes the offer of the brand credible & distinctive thus creating a proposition?

The Brand Proposition is simply put, the offer that the Brand makes which is in line with the Insights that we have about the consumer

Performance + Experiential + Emotive Benefits + Substantiations

D3. What makes the offer of the brand credible & distinctive thus creating a proposition?

Substantiations

- Crucially answer the questions : Why should the consumer believe the brand?
- They provide credibility : without them, the consumer has to take bigger leaps of faith relying only on the brand.
- They could be rooted in performance features, promise of an experience, endorsements etc.
- They are more crucially required where the believability of the benefits being offered is low e.g. anti ageing, food nutrition etc. or where there is a complex history of failure of propositions e.g. insurance claims being settled within 6 hours etc.

Benefits & Reasons to Believe

D3. What makes the offer of the brand credible & distinctive thus creating a proposition?

 - Castrol → Mechanics
- Celebrity
 - Richard Gere → Aids
- Partnerships
 - Surf Excel + Whirlpool

D3. What makes the offer of the brand credible & distinctive thus creating a proposition?

Distinctiveness

- This is probably a very crucial but often overlooked aspect of the proposition
- While being insight led should have provided high consumer relevance to the proposition and a level of implicit competitive differentiation, it's still important to check for distinctiveness as the punch often gets lost in generics

D3. What makes the offer of the brand credible & distinctive thus creating a proposition?

Distinctiveness

- Source of distinctiveness could emanate from either of the benefits or even the substantiations
- Hence, it's important to rank order the benefits & substantiations for distinctiveness

Distinctiveness

Distinctiveness rank	Rank order : 0 implies absence, 1 low	If low distinctiveness, option to Ignore, Recraft, Drop

D4. What's the most salient & desirable hero of proposition for the core consumer?

- This is about what's the most salient, distinctive or newsworthy part of the proposition
- This is extremely critical as most brands go wrong here : they get the process right but get the relative salience wrong
- In a lot of cases, substantiations carry more salience because they are hard and sensorial
- In the absence of clarity about the 'hero', downstream communication & engagement programs go awry

D4. What's the most salient & desirable hero of proposition for the core consumer?

Call Out Example - Basil

Basil belongs to Pt. Masa Depan Busana Apparels : one of the leading feminine apparel companies in Indonesia

- Basil does a business of roughly USD 20 mn with EBITDA of 8%. It sells 30% through own stores and 70% through shop in shops in other stores. 50% of it's business comes from festive wear for more conservative, older consumers. 50% of it's business comes from daily, casual fashion for urban & affluent Chinese working women. Bulk of the more modern merchandise sells from own stores. Basil sells largely because it understands fits & local trends better. It imports & customises from India, Taiwan & China.
- However, the business hasn't been doing well with both the segments struggling. It faces the following challenge : which of the two segments to prioritise? How does it build a sustainable, profitable branded business for the future?
- Past attempts haven't really been successful as there has always been lack of clarity

Call Out Case - Blazar

Blazar : New entrant in Indian hair color & care market. A Brazilian company with global revenues of USD 500 mn, growing at 25% 5yr CAGR, same markets' share of growth 55%, same market share of base 65%, GM 70%, Ebitda 30%. Operates in 6 countries around the globe [Brazil, USA, UK, Italy, Nigeria, Japan] while exporting to 40 more countries.

Blazar, founded by a second generation entrepreneur from a family of small retailers, started operating in Brazil out of a garage 20 years back focussing on niche & premium natural hair care using authentic ingredients. Over time, the business started finding far more success in hair colors, which were ubiquitous in Latin America [65% of revenue]. It's a USD 2.7 bn industry there. Blazar has a 5% overall share but a 20% share in the premium end of the market. The model used by Blazar was largely in-salon sales through a professional & a retail line. Blazar hair colors have sold through a range of fashion colors proposition supported by natural additives as a secondary lever. Of late, the business has also started experimenting with a few proofs of concept in opening hair salons – however, that has not done well. Blazar continues to experiment with the same. Blazar is backed by a very strong R&D.

Blazar now wants to enter Indian market. The Indian hair care market is roughly $3.3 bn growing at 10%. The hair color market is around 20% of that growing at 20% yoy. Almost 15% of hair care and 30% of hair colors are used professionally. Further, around 15% of hair care and 5% of hair color is sold for home use through salons. Average EBITDA in the category ranges from 12% to 23% with cheaper formats having a higher margin.

Hair care in the market includes shampoos, rinse off conditioners, pre conditioners, leave in conditioners, styling gels, mousse and waxes with product segmentation operating on scalp type and cleansing / moisturizing / volumizing benefits. Hair colors include 3 major formats – powder [popularly called dyes] selling at Rs. 10 per use, hair cremes operating at Rs. 50 – 500 per use, henna operating at Rs. 100 for 5 uses. They constitute 30%, 50% and 20% of the market growing respectively at 5%, 20%, 30%. In terms of shades, India is a black & dark brown dominated market [60% growing at 4%] with burgundy next at 30% growing at 25% and rest of the vibrant shades at 10% growing at 20%.

Blazar wants to enter the hair color & / or care market. Backed by a private equity fund now, it has resources to consider a stronger entry. What's the brand ↔ business strategy over 10 years that you'd recommend?

Really Cool Case 4 : Re-segmenting the employment market Heineken

- Heineken wanted to use their impressive sport sponsorships to help build their corporate image and promote the company as a great place to work.

They use the Heineken brand attitude “Open Your World” to show that the company also lived and breathed this attitude.

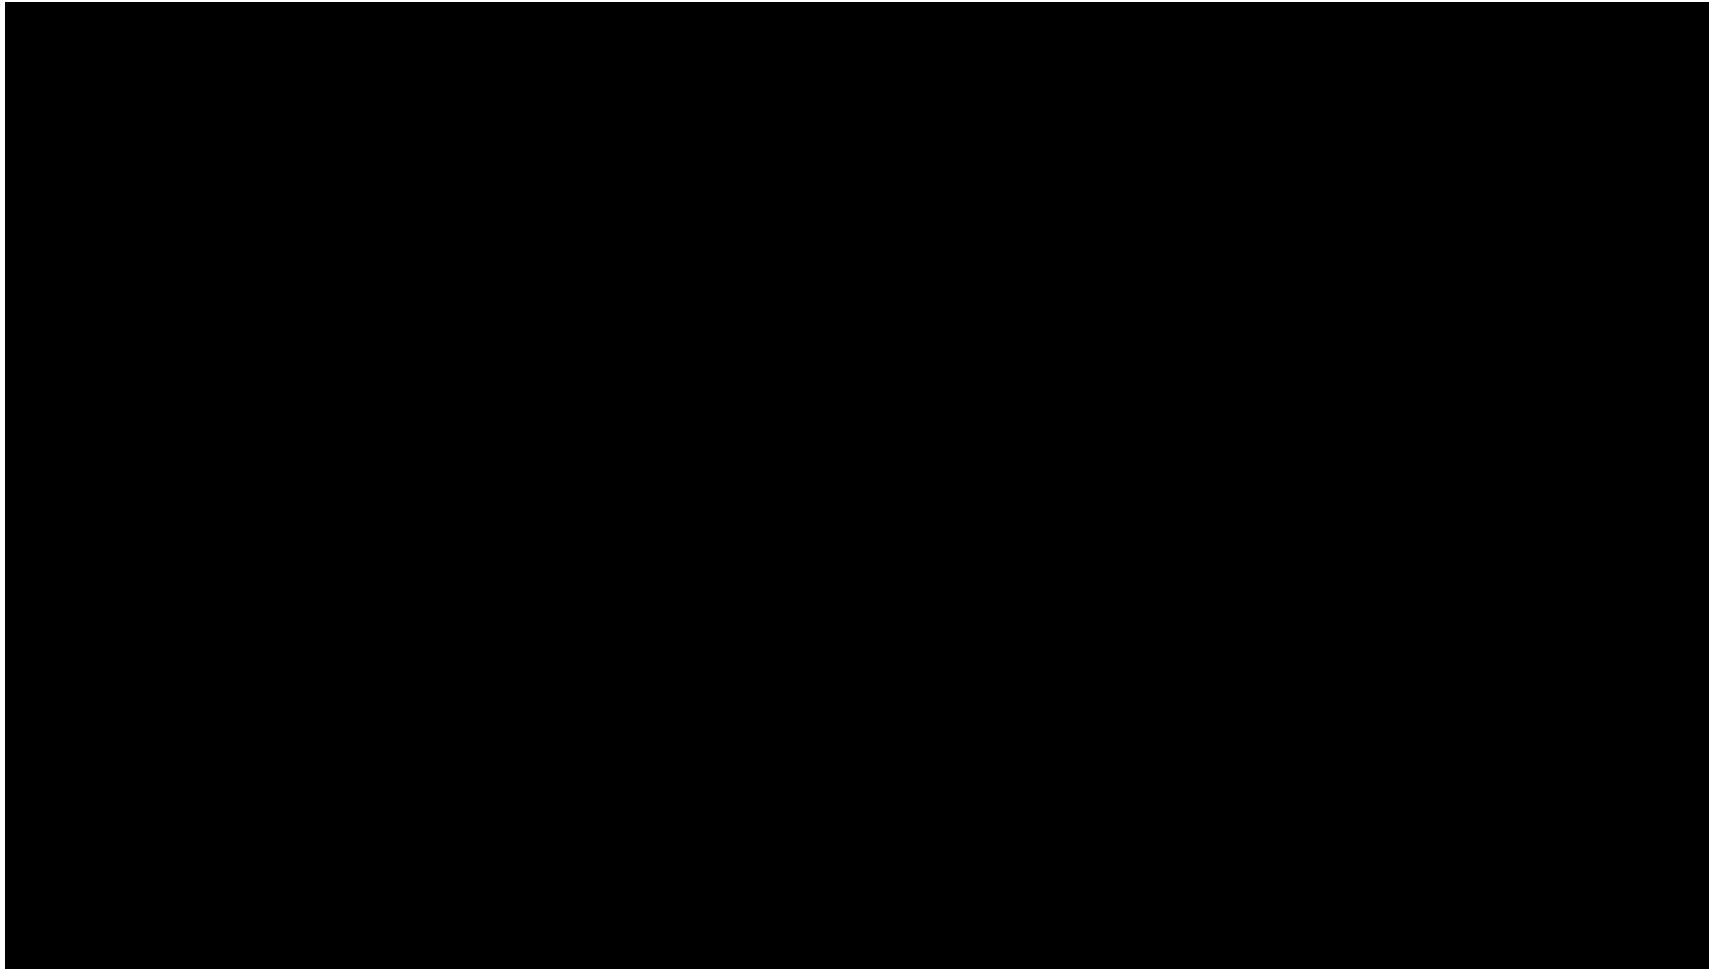

The recruitment process for an important marketing role was used to demonstrate this attitude by putting candidates through a series of unconventional tests which were all captured by secret cameras.

The video has had 422 million media impressions worldwide, CV’s submitted increased by 317% and visits to the HR website increased by 279%.

It also had a very positive impact on Heineken staff.

E3. How does the positioning help reduce consumers' risk & develop faith in it's delivery?

The best framework to understand the same is around brand valuation related ones

Competitive Environment

E3. How does the positioning help reduce consumers' risk & develop faith in it's delivery?

Brand : from the perspective of valuation : BrandFaithSM value

Brand is the faith or trust that people have in it's performance across different attributes

This extent of this faith determines the profits attributable to the brand ...

The intensity of this faith reduces or increases the risk of cash flows ...

The proof of this faith is either

- The pricing premia that individual customers are willing to pay against relevant market choices ... or
- The relative higher return on brand effort deployed to sustain or grow business

From BrandFaithSM

E3. How does the positioning help reduce consumers' risk & develop faith in it's delivery?

BrandFaithSM XtentSM ...

Brand is the faith or trust that people have in it's performance across different attributes

This extent of this faith determines the profits attributable to the brand ...

Example:

Brand A of steel pipes & tubes that's differentiated on service

Brand B of steel pipes & tubes that's differentiated on quality : adherence to specifications

Brand C of steel pipes & tubes that's differentiated on longevity

Extent of faith in brand performance or delivery needed would be the most in Brand C followed by A followed by B as it's much more difficult to assess longevity rationally and it is easiest to measure against specifications. Hence, the extent of faith required would be highest in C and lowest in B. Thus, the share of profits attributable to brand would be the highest for C followed by A & B respectively.

From BrandFaithSM

BrandFaithSM XtentSM measurement & application ...

BrandFaithSM XtentSM can be measured through research based on the following proprietary model:

1. Determine the importance of drivers of customer choice in the category in the following buckets for different customer segments:
Delivery | Features | Aesthetics | Usage experience | Service | Advocacy | Price
2. Research the response of each segment on the following key metrics:
 - Current associations of different brand with above drivers
 - Default expectations from a new entrant in the category on the above drivers
 - Default expectations on innovations launched by different brands in the market on the above drivers
 - Believability of a proposition launched by brand in question against competitors on the above drivers
 - Extent of scrutiny undertaken on a proposition launched by brand in question against competitors on the above drivers
3. This would give the BrandFaithSM XtentSM for the brand in question for each driver cited
4. BrandFaithSM XtentSM for each driver multiplied by the importance of each driver for the category in general & brand in particular would give composite BrandFaithSM XtentSM for the category as well as for the brand in question.
5. This would in turn not just give the extent of EVA [PAT less cost of capital deployed] attributable to the brand but would also give a sense of Branded Profit Pool for the category as a superset.

BrandFaithSM XtentSM application on positioning

BrandFaithSM XtentSM as measured pre & post positioning stimulus would give the extent of increase in consumers' faith in its delivery

E3. How does the positioning help reduce consumers' risk & develop faith in it's delivery?

BrandFaithSM XtensitySM...

Brand is the faith or trust that people have in it's performance across different attributes

The intensity of this faith reduces or increases the risk of cash flows ...

Example:

Brand A of bath fittings is very well known, respected & considered innovative

Brand B of bath fittings is a new entrant, growing very fast known for good quality at great prices

The intensity of faith in brand's delivery or performance needed would be the most in Brand A followed by B as A has stronger market standing for the right reasons. As a consequence, the risk associated with A would be lower than B & any lender to A would be willing to do so at lower rates.

From BrandFaithSM

BrandFaithSM XtensitySM measurement & application ...

BrandFaithSM XtensitySM can be measured through research based on the following proprietary model:

1. Determine the internal & external intensity of brand on the following attributes:
 - Relevance | Differentiation | Coherence | Dynamism → Internally & Externally
 - Benchmark a carefully chosen category, adjacent brands and one outstanding brand independent of category
2. This would give the BrandFaithSM XtensitySM for every brand in question benchmarked to other players
3. Establish the rate of capital & people availability for different brands in question through research
4. Plot the BrandFaithSM XtensitySM against the rate of capital & people availability for the different brands. This is generally a S curve as shown
5. Plot own BrandFaithSM XtensitySM & arrive at Brand Capital IndexSM. Similarly, arrive at Brand HR IndexSM. Take an average of the two in ratio of capital deployment for human versus other resources to get Brand Composite Capital IndexSM.

- Godrej, who is one helluva optimistic Indian: a free spirit full of energy, a cool, vibrant person ... a modern person who is well travelled & knowledgeable. He is wise & you feel like trusting him implicitly. . a person who is always about solutions rather than problems. He always tries to understand things from your point of view and shows a new, fresh direction that is pleasantly surprising
- He believes in expressing himself in an endearing manner. He believes in moving forward in life ... always. Each moment of his life is an experience for him ... an experience to be lived & enjoyed. He loves to interact with people who express themselves, people who value progress ... above all, people who share the same belief that he does ... a belief in Brighter Living
- In every consumer, there is a child waiting to come out ... a child who wants to own & enjoy the latest stuff available in the market ... a child who wants to proudly show his new stuff to others. Yet, there is also a strict, logical parent within him who holds him back ... who wonders whether all this stuff is really necessary or meaningful. Hence, the consumer is a bit torn apart, a bit confused
- Godrej is the cool, elder bro to the child within the consumer ... a bro who gets wow yet reliable stuff for him, who plays with him & lets him be ... Yet, the parent within the child is fine with it as he trusts this bro because he is well travelled, knowledgeable & knows what is best for the younger one
- As a result, the consumer is far more satisfied, at peace, confident & full of joy
